The Writing on the Walls

History is written all over Fairfax City, Virginia.

Datsiff-Alison House, the oldest surviving house in the city

SOME SKETCHED animals, soldiers or the Stars and Stripes. Others played games, wrote poems or avowed their intentions: "Death and destruction to the rebels" and "We will be avenged." Mostly, though, the Union soldiers passing through Fairfax, Virginia, in 1862 and 1863 simply wanted to say "I was here." Using lead pencil and charcoal from campfires, they inscribed their names, regiments and hometowns on the still-curing plaster walls of the circa 1859 Blenheim House, which was used at various times during the war as a field hospital and message center.

"We probably have the most outstanding collection of Civil War-era graffiti in the region in terms of quality and quantity," says Andrea Loewenwarter, a historic resources specialist for Fairfax City. That graffiti is accessible to visitors as never before with the opening in November 2008 of the partially restored Blenheim House and new Civil War Interpretive Center on its grounds.

Fairfax City plans further refurbishment of Blenheim House, including interpretive exhibits. For now, visitors can tour the unfurnished first floor of this beautiful antebellum house and see up close some of the intriguing graffiti that has been uncovered beneath layers of paint and wallpaper.

Although the best-preserved graffiti exists in the home's off-limits third-floor, much of it can be viewed in the interpretive center's full-size, partial attic replica. "That was the driving reason behind the center—to bring the attic to everybody," Loewenwarter notes.

Fairfax City, just 20 minutes from Washington, D.C., sprouted in the late 18th century from a wayside inn for travelers. Its historic Old Town is rich in 19th-century buildings and stories. The first skirmish of the Civil War occurred here—and the first Confederate officer was killed—on June 1, 1861.

Ranger John Mosby captured Union Brigadier General Edwin H. Stoughton asleep in bed at the William Gunnell House on the night of March 9, 1863. The Ford Building, once home to accused Confederate spy Antonia Ford (who later married a Union major), is now an office building with exhibits in its public spaces about Ford's life and escapades.

The core historic district is centered on Main Street between West and East Streets, with additional sites on Chain Bridge Road. North Street was redeveloped within the past year, with the architecture of the new designed to blend with the old.

The Fairfax Museum & Visitor Center, open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., houses exhibitions about the town's colorful history and provides maps for self-guided walking tours. Special programs are offered the second Sunday of each month.

The town's historical society, Historic Fairfax City, Inc., offers guided walking tours every Saturday evening from April through October. The story-filled tour includes a stop inside one or more of the historic buildings. "It's a real draw for Civil War buffs," says Hildie Carney, one of the society's volunteer guides.
